were savages whose duplicity was excited, or simple people who knew no better, or rebels disguised as Government troops. The Grand Secretary Li, you will recollect, estimated that they were from ten militia, or train-ban men. This is not possible, that they were; and, were the fact established, the responsibility of conspiracy or other would scarcely be less than if they had been regulars of the provincial army. The irregularity of the force at the same time would, in no way, discredit the statements contained in the letters of the Bureau official, action agents, which are the most important evidence implicating the Chinese Government. Sir T. Wade's provision, so far as we know at present, has been singularly correct. A number of important savages have been lodged in prison, and were to be brought forward as the mag-dorens of past Miao. One or two officials have also been placed on their trial, not however, for investigating or having any hand in the attack, but for not having prevented the attack and murders taking place. Continuing his instructions to Mr. Grosvenor, the British Minister remarks that he would do well to keep himself in reserve, and allow his colleagues to attend the trial of examination of the Chinese. "If," he goes on, "convictions be obtained, Mr. BARNES should be deputed to see any sentence, such as of death or corporal punishment, which you may accept at first, carried into effect. No sentence to summary punishment will be passed, you may be sure, upon an official should any be arranged. If none be, you must be guided by your opinion of the evidence collected as to whether you should claim the examination of any." In Sir T.
Wade's opinion, the Tung-ping and the Tung-ping of Mowin in office at the time of the outrage, are, before Chinese law, guilty of nothing worse, at least of not having prevented the attack on Colonel BARNES's party. Judging from Li Han-chuan's memoirs—or the subject, there is no reason to believe that they would be proved guilty of omission of duty. It is to be feared that, as far as officials are concerned, this is the extent to which the inquiry would reach. The latest reports from Yunnan state that the inquiry has terminated, but that it has had no definite result. The alleged criminals are said to be still in prison. Should this report prove correct, it would imply that Mr. Grosvenor had not been satisfied with the proceedings, and had protested against them, as instructed to do by Sir T. Wade. We would like to know that the inquiry has not been so fruitless as reported, but must confess to feeling little confidence in the efforts of the Chinese Authorities to trace home the crime to the investigators. They would have no objection to give up the instruments; but they would shield its authors if possible.

Sir T. Wade did not forget to lay down exact instructions for the return of the Mission from Yunnan. Whether satisfied or not with the result of the proceedings, Mr. Grosvenor was to claim fulfillment of the Prince of Kung's promise that he should be escorted to the frontier.
That he did so is apparent from the statement that when he and his colleagues left Yunnan on the 26th March a mandarin named Li, with twelve hundred men, was appointed to escort them to the frontier. Sir T. Wade directs Mr. Grosvenor to take the Mandarin route, halting at that place to collect Mr. BARNES's remains. He was to put himself in communication with the Indian Agent at Bhamo, and request him to telegraph anything of importance to Sir T. Wade from Mandalay. With regard to Messrs. DA-VENPORT and BAKER, they were both to accompany their chief to Mandalay, but Sir T. Wade left it to Mr. Grosvenor to decide whether either or both should proceed with him to Bhamo or return through China, and, if the latter, whether the return route should be by Chungking, by Kwei-chow and Hunan, or by Nanning-fu and Kwangsi. "The year-will," continues the British Minister, "be well on before your work is done, and it may be too late for the long land journey through China. Whatever may be your decision, I wish you not to lose sight of the object of the Government of India in sending the mission last year. It was a mission of exploration, and as far as it may be possible it will be the duty of all of you to collect information, and this is the reason why I should be glad if Mr. DAVENPORT and Mr. BARNES would return overland. I shall hope to hear from you as frequently as possible. With the aid of some 200 men, the transportation of letters should be accomplished with difficulty. Lastly, I have to request that a journal be kept, of all occurrences, from the day you leave Hankow, the names of persons being always written when they are first mentioned in Chinese character." Whatever the result of the inquiry may have been, therefore, there is no trifling consolation in the belief that the mission will not prove altogether barren of results. The Commissioners will not fail to gather, during their long journey over unknown ground, much information which will be both useful and interesting.

An inquiry was held yesterday on the body of a woman named Thomas Evans, belonging to the steamship Mauretania, now in the Zeeduke Dock, before the coroner and a jury consisting of Messrs. D. R. Crawford, M. D. Jones, and O. F. Grosvenor. The deceased (Evans) was with others to bath at a stream near the Aberdeen Dock, and being unable to swim got drowned. Alfred Robson, a lamp trimmer on board, deposed to accompanying the deceased and others to the stream, when she was there was a pool of water. They could both swim a little. When in the middle of the stream, the deceased said, "Harry! Harry!" He rushed in the water and caught her by the neck, when she was drifting by the bank and went down head first, carrying with her the lamp trimmer. He took her from the stream and brought her to the shore, but she was dead. He was unable to get her back to the shore, and she was found floating in the water. The jury returned a verdict of accidental drowning.
